

Expected Rise in August CPI Unlikely to Alter Fed Path

The August Consumer Price Index (CPI) was expected to be a bit hot (and it was) but there were enough positives within the report to keep policymakers sidelined at next week's FOMC meeting.

Scott McIntyre

Headline CPI rose by +0.6%, matching the median forecast with the largest increase in 14 months. Core CPI (excluding food and energy) rose +0.3%, the first uptick since February and slightly above the +0.2% median forecast.

Read the full article

Read more Economic Commentary