

Markets Rally on Mixed Data

The Fed's preferred inflation measure, personal consumption expenditures (PCE), generally matched forecasts in January. This seems to be a relief to the markets after an uncomfortably warm CPI print earlier in the month. This morning's numbers reinforce the notion of a patient Fed with a +0.3% advance in the January PCE headline and +0.4% core increase, which was actually the highest in a year.

Scott McIntyre

Read the full article

Read more Economic Commentary