

Markets Rally on Signs of Slowing Growth and Restrained Prices

The Fed's preferred inflation measure came in mostly below forecast in August, while both consumer income and spending slipped in the final month of the summer. The combination of cooling prices, falling demand and reduced income growth reinforce the Fed's decision to cut 50 basis points earlier this month and should support further cuts at the November and December meetings.

Scott McIntyre

Read the full article

Read more Economic Commentary