The Efficiency of the Municipal Bond Tax-Exemption was Called into Question and the Same Analysis Proposes to Eliminate the Tax-Exemption

Tom Kozlik

- A policy option from a recent American Enterprise Institute report proposed to eliminate the municipal bond tax-exemption, and the report calls into question the efficiency of the tax-exemption.
- This criticism is a reminder to the public finance community about the priority of educating D.C. lawmakers about the importance and effectiveness the current tax-exemption provides nationwide.
